THE CENTURY OF WAR.

Harriet Martineau, writing in 1853, declared that events then threatening indicated a century of war in Europe. Rash as the statement may have seemed to her contemporaries, it has been singularly fulfilled. Strictly speaking, Europe has been incessantly torn by by wars and the rumors of wars—which are not unfrequently as destructive as actual wars themselves—since this remarkable utterance. One year after Miss Martineau recorded her apprehensions—which in the light of events may be called prehensions—the new Crimean war was kindled in Turkey, whose flame, with but temporary lull, has burned and seethed among the European embers since.

In 1854 the dim star of Bethlehem shone for a moment to light the Christian powers into conflict in behalf of the Christians in Turkey. The shores of the Black Sea were alive with marching Britons and Gauls. While its waves were heavy with Christian corpses, sailing and administering to the battles, it was almost before the Treaty of Paris put a period to the Crimean war, in which Russia, England, France and Sardinia were the chief actors, Turkey doing little more than furnishing the pretext and reaping the lion's share of the advantages. In the very hour of the peace England was involved in the tremendous Sepoy rebellion, in which the famous regiments identified with Wellington's achievements were in many cases decimated by sudden slaughter. In all the annals of war a more terrible ordeal was never put on an army and a people than this ruthless uprising, in which the prophetic utterance of Miss Martineau was further exemplified. Since, though carried on in India, the war was an essentially European war, the massacred soldiers and settlers, and the treasure coming from the population and economies of Great Britain. It is a suggestive comment on the swift tide of endeavor of this age that the Sepoy outbreak, which shocked the world so profoundly only twenty years ago, is almost entirely passed from the public memory, and its cause as confused as the Schleswig-Holstein politics. A more whimsical motive never inspired a more atrocious series of butcheries.

A rumor that the English were surreptitiously attempting to force the lubricated grease of pork in their hands through the common cartridge, inspired the fanatic Indians to rise and slaughter the English garrisons. But to Miss Martineau prophecy, in which causes and details do not long a part, since her statement was merely that war would take up the attention of European powers for a century, and that a new disposition of government would ensue—Indian mutiny sometimes thought from her commission in the tendencies, that property would be a prime factor in the new arrangement of forces—though not commencing herself to the doctrine of compulsory division of spoliation, as the French demand. In 1857 the English wound up the Indian war, and the latter part of that year Napoleon told the Austrian ambassador that France thought "war for an idea" the noblest division of all.

The Indian campaign followed, in which the victories at Solferino and Magenta made the Napoleonic "idea" an accomplished fact. The kingdom of Sardinia was started with that growth, which never stopped in development until Italy became one State with the eternal cry for its capital, Rome.

In 1866 Garibaldi overthrew the Neapolitan Bourbons thus continuing the war in Europe, while the French, under Palikao, were waging war in the territories of the Emperor of the Celestials, to be presently joined by the British. Simultaneously a triple alliance of England, France and Spain extended the field of operations to the new world, beginning a struggle, which finally involved Austria and Belgium in the contest.

Even while these European levies were pushing the standards of France forward in the steps of Cortez, Austria and Prussia joined hands for the deposition of Denmark, and a war of unprecedented celerity resulted.

No sooner was this war ended than the tremendous duel between Prussia and Italy on one side, and Austria, Bavaria, Saxony and Wurtemberg on the other, began, exhausting, in the short space of nine months, more men and treasure than ordinary wars of six times the duration. This war was in 1866, the same year Russia began those gigantic strides Eastward, which threw England into a fever of preparation for the protection of her vast Indian domains. For ten years the Czar kept his armies conquering and acquiring territories, and there is now no more to conquer until the Turkish question has been definitely settled.

In 1870 the stupendous war of the century between France and Prussia fairly ended a twenty years' cycle of the Mariemont prophecy, leaving the seeds of dissatisfaction and revenge, which insure the fulfilment of the half century, if not the hundred years. In these tremendous combats England's African contest should not be forgotten. In 1866 she conquered, at great cost, King Theodorus' unassailable kingdom, and some years later, the obstinate ruler of Ashantee. The Dutch meanwhile expended considerable European treasure and life in the luxurious pastures of Sumatra, bringing the blood-shedding down to 1870, when the Herzegovinian battles began, which are not yet ended. This represents the quarter of a century of incessant battle on the part of European powers. But the immediate promise of the future confirms the letter as well as the spirit of this gloomy prophecy. If, the Russian army sent out towards Constantinople, there is little doubt now of its doing it, it is almost inevitable that a crop of wars will be planted which will blossom in blood in the next fifty years. "Europe," said Napoleon the First, "will be Republican or Cossack within fifty years." He was wrong in limiting the time. A hundred years would have made this premonition a prophecy. [illegible]

ADJUSTING THE BALANCE.—The Scientific American points out, giving figures which are seemingly careful, that in the event of a channel being opened into the great basin of the Sahara Desert certain disastrous results will follow. The surface to be flooded is an average eighty feet below the surface of the ocean, and the extent is near four million square miles, yielding on the basis of one hundred and fifty millions for the entire ocean surface, the general level will be lowered something like two feet. So much for the immediate result, but farther than this it is evident that the loss which has practically no inflow of fresh water, the loss from evaporation must be made good from the unlimited quantities, this loss, according to the authority quoted, would amount to about 2,000,000,000,000,000 cubic feet annually, and the supply channel from the ocean would have to discharge a volume five hundred and twenty-five times as much, water as carried by the river Rhine. It is estimated that in a little more than a century the entire basin would be filled with salt, which would be but a poor substitute for the sand which now tempers the climate of Southern Europe. Such a possibility should be well considered before it is too late to retract.

"LET THE LIGHT ENTER"

The Boston Journal of Chemistry, in a somewhat lengthy, and very sensible exploitation of the Gen. Pleasanton blue-glass theory, says: "But how are we to explain the marvellous blue-glass treatment? We are inclined to think that the sunshine which did not come through the blue glass was the curative agent rather than that which traversed the colored panes. We believe in the beneficent influences of sunshine,—the pure natural article, and not merely the residual rays that get through the Pleasanton strainer. We do not doubt the honesty of the General, nor that he really believes he is improving on the divine gift of sunlight by his blue glass filter, but even if it were a deliberate deception, we could forgive him for it so long as he requires only one blue pane to sever colorless ones. Anything that will get people to let the sunlight into their houses is to be welcomed, though there be a piece of quackery in it. We have no doubt that many who are now taking their daily sunbath, innocently tempered by the cerulean admixture of General Pleasanton, are receiving more of the direct sunlight in a day than they have been in the habit of getting in a week or a month before; and we must be pardon if, not doubting at the subject through blue glasses we ascribe the benefit they derive from the bath to that single fact."

The papers are publishing cuts of the pedestrian the forces in Russia and Turkey. When Alexis saw one he said he was done with Alexis, saw one he said he was done with Alexis, and he was over for his country, and fenced off, and turned his back on the grizzly.

The body of a man was found in the water near Parker's Head, last week. The dress was that of a sailor, having a sailor's knife sheath about him. It was badly decomposed, the face entirely gone, and it was evident that it was the same man that was drowned from one of the lee vessels loading at Parker's Head in February last. Under these circumstances, the authorities of Phipsburg considered further investigation unnecessary, and had the body interred.

THE LARGEST BREECH-LOADING CANNON IN THE WORLD.—Herr Krupp, the celebrated Prussian artillerist, is about completing a monster piece of ordnance, with the evident intention of proving that guns of cast steel can be produced on a scale to vie with the wrought iron ordnance of England. The weight of the new gun is eighty tons, the same as the great Krupp gun at Shoeburyness, which has recently excited so much attention, and though it falls short of the huge proportions of the 100-ton Armstrong gun, it is still a marvelous work, as being made of steel, and, unlike the English monster, loading at the breech. The calibre of the gun is about 16 inches, the projectile weighs 1650 pounds and the powder charge 400 pounds. The gun is built on the same model as other Krupp guns, consisting of concentric cones of solid cast steel, with rings, which increase in thickness from the breech until they reach a total diameter of 5 feet 10 inches, less than the Frazer gun. The cost of the gun, exclusive of the carriage, which weighs 55 tons, is $100,000, or double that of the 80-ton wrought iron guns produced at Woolwich. The initial velocity anticipated from the projectile of this gun is 1552 feet per second, giving an energy of 27,513 tons, which is equal to 550 feet tons per inch of the shot's circumference. The nearest approach hitherto attempted to this enormous gun is the 35-ton breech-loader exhibited last year at Philadelphia, which has been purchased by Russia and has just been delivered at Cronstadt. Herr Krupp has constructed this last piece of his skill solely at his own expense through it is not likely that it will long remain on his hands, despite its great cost. Not satisfied with this achievement, however, he has constructed plans for a 124-ton steel breech-loader, with a calibre of over 18 inches, and throwing a shot weighing a round ton with a charge of 600 pounds of powder. The cost of the gun is estimated at $167,500, exclusive of the carriage, which would weigh 52 tons. Herr Krupp is also building for Turkey a duplicate 35-ton gun of that exhibited at the Centennial, and just sent to the Russian Government.

THE CAUSES OF TURKISH DECLINE.

See the Boston Traveller

The gradual weakening of the Ottoman power by the physical deterioration and numerical diminution of the Turkish race has been frequently enlarged upon of late, but we have seldom seen the causes at work to produce this decline so clearly and succinctly treated as in article by Mr. Charles H Woodman, published by Appletons' Magazine. "The suicide of the Ottomans," as Mr. Woodman writes, is due to a complication of causes arising from religion, temperament, surroundings and institutions of so destructive a nature that the continued existence of the Turks as a separate people is an evidence of their original and inherent vitality of race. The first cause assigned by the writer for Ottoman decadence is the absolute authority of the ruler and the passive submission of the people to the most atrocious acts of the government. The Sultan is complete master of his subjects lives, and though, tradition is supposed to limit the number of people whom he has the liberty to put to death every day—the permissible number being variously stated at seven and fifteen—it is practically unrestricted. Recent writers at the close of the seventeenth century, said that the Sultan unscrupulously destroyed nearly a thousand of his subjects daily, which, though no doubt an exaggeration is thought to the extent of the latter's crimes formerly and to some extent at present carried on at the caprice of the Ottoman sovereigns. The Mohammedan belief in destiny explains the unresisting endurance of such tyranny by the people. Weakness, cruelty and rapacity on the part of the rulers are therefore far more ominous to the prosperity of the country than in other European governments even of the old feudal type, and such have been the chief characteristics of the later Sultans. From this degeneration has arisen two certain evils. The tenure of subordinate positions has come to depend largely on the influence of the seraglio, Moslem ability have been sacrificed to the whims of favorites, and officials wholly unfit to rise have evoked a deviation to the same source. The insecurity of office has engendered a despotic disinterestedness on the part of the holders, who, knowing that their tenure is at the mercy of others, are disinclined to make the most of their opportunity to secure permanent advancement.

A more dangerous and deeply-rooted evil is the decline of the central power itself. The disembarkment of the Empire, the frequent revolts of provinces, sometimes successful, sometimes suppressed at a prohibitive and ruinous cost, the independence of some states, for nearly half a century the Empire's ally and the subjection of another, more than nominally, entirely to sovereignty in the case of others, show how rapid has been the decline of the Ottoman power in the field. The growing and intolerable oppression to which the Christians are subjected by the ruling races is one of the first premises of the decline of Turk sle dominence. Of the Christian population inhabitants of Europe's Turkey only three nations are Moslems, the remaining population, Christians of various sects, are the backbone of the country, industrially and commercially. The Moslem despises all labor, the merchants, artisans, laborers, agriculturists are nearly all Christians. Upon their industry the prosperity of the nation depends, but with a taste and tolerance which would be singular were not Turkish, the ruling race by persecution, outrage and massacre have for centuries done their best or worst to destroy the very industries upon which their financial existence depends. The Christian is taxed to the last degree, his wife and daughters liable at any moment to be dragged off to the harem of someone of the Moslems, and his life held at the mercy of the Mohammedan rulers. This is called forth an aggregate of twenty-seven per cent, to which must be added arbitrary extortions of the pashas who having both the occasions for the exactions and the opportunity of exercising money from the unfortunate wretches. Office-holders are universally venal, robbery, oppression and extortion too take hold on dealings with the people. So flagrant and the effect of bribe-taking become that the officials were specially created as a barrier between the people and their officers. Thus Turkish "tribunes of the people" have done good service in combating the oppression of the pashas, in restraining official corruption. But the question of ways and betterments is peculiarly applicable to a people who have sunk so low in the scale of civilization as the Turks. The Christians have gradually become as corrupt as the officials whom they were appointed to watch, and in individual cases of hatred or combination is generally formed to their ruin. The same evil has crept into the army, and the gold of Russia has often gained her victories that her arms could not achieve.

The result of these combined evils is the rapid depopulation of some of the finest agricultural regions of Europe. The population of the Ottoman Empire in 1856 was calculated at only twenty inhabitants to the square mile. Nine-tenths of the rich soil of Mesopotamia is a wilderness. A quarter of a century ago not one-seventh of the alluvial lands of Wallachia and Moldavia was under cultivation. The rayahs, unable longer to endure the oppression of their rulers, have left the rich and one-time plains and valleys, and fled to the mountains, in the fastness of which they find comparative security. The Moslem population flock to the cities and towns. The increase of the city population, which some superficial travellers consider a sign of prosperity, is really one of the worst indications of decay. The fields are deserted, while the streets are overrun with vagabonds and idlers. The cities must be fed while the agricultural capacity of the country is being constantly lessened. Moreover the cities themselves are falling to decay. The system of land tenure and taxation render the holding of real property an undesirable form of investment. No one cares to repair or rebuild houses, and vast estates in mortmain accumulate in the hands of the Sultan and of the religious institutions. Meanwhile the Turk is sunk in apathy and sloth, enfeebled by his vices and prevented by his religion from engaging in the work of reform. The destiny which he so frequently invokes, points to his overthrow and political annihilation as the first inevitable step towards any real regeneration of the regions over which he rules.

We do not know how sensitive a man Mr Wade Hampton is, but we should say that if he had a spark of manly feeling in his breast, he would be deeply humiliated by the testimony now being given before the United States Court in Charleston, with reference to the Ellenton riots in South Carolina. Some of the features of this testimony are given in a letter which we publish this morning. It will be seen that, whether the prosecuting authorities have or have not gotten hold of the guilty men, there was a general and concerted effort among the whites on the Georgia border, aided by men from the other side of that border, to frighten the negroes into either voting the Democratic ticket or abstaining from voting the Republican ticket. For this purpose they "raided" the country, killing numerous leaders, whipping others, and threatening those whom they thought to be worth attention. If it had not been for the conspiracy, Mr. Chamberlain would have been the undisputed Governor of South Carolina, and there would have been no "reconciliation" of Mr. Hampton and his followers required.—New York Times.

THE OHIO REPUBLICANS.

WHAT THEY THINK OF THE NEW POLICY.

We are permitted to copy the following portion of a private letter received by a prominent citizen in this section of the State from an eminent Republican of Ohio, who takes a deep interest in political questions and who possesses unusual familiarity with the condition of public sentiment in the State. His views will be of special interest at this time when the public are asking what is thought of the President's policy by the Republicans of his own State. The letter which we copy deals very frankly with the situation:

MAY 15, 1877.

My Dear Sir:—I want to supplement what I wrote you the other day by a few additional words.

The Washington correspondent of the New York Tribune, under date of April 12th, says that signs of a coming storm in the Republican party are daily increasing—that there is an unmistakable disposition on the part of a few men who have heretofore been very influential in the councils of the Republican party to organize a movement against the President. All this, we are assured, has not made the least impression on the President, and we are further informed that he "never expected that all his public acts would be at once approved, even by the party which elected him." To this is added the still more startling proposition that, even if the division in the Republican party should be much more serious than now seems possible, there still remains the possibility—almost the probability—that President Hayes will find friends among the opposition."

Was ever well-arranged plan that the President inaugurated should fall out to the Democrats? Postmaster-General Key, as you have probably noticed, writes to his brother that the President "desires to be as liberal towards the Southern people as he dare," and he urges that Southern Democrats wisely extend him support, "so that he may be enable to do all his patronage to them liberally, and revolutionize the system of Federal patronage which has existed in the South since the war." And he guesses is his opinion that "the true method for the Democratic party in the South to protect itself, and maintain a successful organization is for that party to declare in favor of Mr. Hayes. Administration, not as Republicans, but as Democrats upon his southern policy. If the President's southern policy fails the Southern Democrats party will be to blame for it." Which is much like saying, the President is ready to abandon the Republican party if only the Democrats will stand by him.

It is President Hayes, therefore, who has made war on the Republican party, and not the men who have heretofore been influential in the councils of the Republican party that have made war on the President. It can hardly be expected that the great leaders of a party will submissively renounce the principles for which they have contended in peace and war for a quarter of a century at the dictation of one man, whether President or potentate.

Now, I take it that it is pretty generally understood that if Hayes was entitled to the vote of Louisiana, then Packard was elected Governor of that State. And yet Nichols is recognized as Governor, because, we were told, Packard is unable to maintain himself "against the armed force." Maintain himself against what? Against a wealthy minority who refuse to submit to the decision of the ballot-box? And so Hayes recognizes this mob, and that is called "home rule, local self-government." And then in all seriousness, added to injury by the assurance that the rights of all classes are to be respected, "will some body tell us what becomes of the rights of the majority in Louisiana, who voted for Packard? The verdict of the ballot-box has been set aside; and that is an end of true government. This is de facto, there is no mockery like saying to the men that their rights are to be respected, when the right to have their ballots counted and respected is forcibly set aside. What rights have they left when this is gone? The negro under the old slave system was protected in life and limb, if he obeyed the building of his master. And it may be that Ku-Klux outrages and Hamburg massacres will cease when the negro ceased to oppose the white man's rule. And that is what "home rule" in the South means. It is what Hampton means! It is what Nichols means! Is it what Hayes means? The constitution put upon it by each is as different as "thanks of the same language made from the same dog."

Are Republicans shaken? Ohio Republicans are not. The Liberals who led the Republican revolt in 1872, supplemented by the Cincinnati Gazette, are in high feather. They are the men who are running the present Administration. Take men present to say that Hayes is in favor with Republican principles, but it remains true, of the story of the woman whose husband was in the habit of getting drunk and beating her. One day she questioned him to know whether he loved her. "Of course I love you," he replied. "Now, John, honor bright, do you love me as well as you used to?" "Why, certainly I do, Nancy, what makes you ask?" "Because, John, if you do, you have the meanest way of showing it of any man I ever saw." So, if Hayes is in love with Republican principles, he has the meanest way of showing it of any man ever elected to a high office.

But we are urged to wait and see if the President's peace policy does not "work well." Are men who believe in Republican principles ready to wait and see whether it will work well to strike down the ballot-box? Are the Republicans of Maine ready to consent to wait and see whether it is best to submit to the rule of an aristocracy? Mr. Curtis tells us in Harper's Weekly that such measures as that which recently took place at De Kalb, Mississippi, are the "lawless events natural to the frontiers of civilization, and the relics of a slave-cursed community, and which will cease only with the advance of higher intelligence." And so, forsooth, we must shake hands with the bloody murderers and wait until their "home rule" shall introduce this "higher intelligence." The same desire for "home rule," no doubt, animates the Senate of South Carolina in asking for Executive clemency in the case of the Hamburg assassins. And because we ask that the men in the South who have perilled their lives in standing by the Republican party shall be treated with humanity the friends of the President unceremoniously talk about our anxiety to shake the "bloody shirt," and to take revenge on a fallen foe. It is a lie that ought to blister the lips of the man who utter it. Not in the history of the world is there another instance of such magnanimity to a vanquished foe as has been shown by the Republican party towards the men who sought to destroy this Government and found upon its ruins a slave empire.

But I need not dwell upon this picture. I may say to you, however, if you have been wantingly hoping some voice of remonstrance from the Buckeye State, that your friends have been so shocked and surprised that they have neither known what to say or how to say it. But they will speak; and I do assure you from past mistakes in the Republicans of Ohio, when I say they will speak as they have been won't to do in former years—for Justice and for the Rights of Humanity. The word for the hour to all true Republicans is:

"Let us press
The golden cluster on our brave old flag
In closer union, and if trembling less
Brighter shall shine the stars which still remain."

A murder conspicuous for its atrocity, even in that region of lawlessness, is perpetrated in Mississippi. A gentleman of his character and his virtues is arrested on a false charge, a mob assails the jail in which he is lodged, and murder him and his son. His daughter is wounded in attempting to shield her father, and dies for the lack of surgical assistance, which no surgeon in that community, was brave enough to render, fearing that he might share the fate of his patient. This mob was composed not of the dregs of society, but of men of position in the county, who, from political hatred, have imbrued their hands in innocent blood. Accustomed as the country has unhappily become to acts of lawless violence in the South, a thrill of horror runs through the land at this worse than Indian barbarity, and in response to it, the local authority awakes to some show of action. The Governor of the State speaks fitting words of condemnation, and announces his purpose to visit the scene with legal investigation and legal penalty. He goes in person to the scene, ascertains all its horrible details, and concludes that "it will not do to stir the thing up." "Talk in Mississippi, justice." This is the action of a Chief Magistrate who owes his election to similar violence, or the threats of it. And this is the order that reigns in Warren? And the people of Mississippi invite Northern men to come to them with their capital and enterprise!—Providence Journal.

The Mexican papers are aflame with indignation over the suggestion that Mexico be placed under the protection of the United States or 15 annexed. They are ready to resign themselves to any ill-fortunes of their own making rather than harbor a thought of any such scheme. One paper declares thereat no allies of the Americans on the Mexican side of the Rio Grande, but that in case of war all factions would be enemies, and says further, "A campaign like that of 1847 and 1848 cannot be repeated. The times of Santa Ana have passed. The Mexicans have progressed. To-day they know the American does not civilize, he exterminates. Hence the project of annexation is a dream—a real nightmare." That is to say, the Americans take a great regard for California and in a few years put it ahead of Mexico. This is "extermination" in the eyes of a Mexican.

The papers in different parts of Maine report the crop prospect as unusually favorable. The season is at least two weeks earlier than the average, and the weather has been very favorable for planting. The prospect of a large hay crop is good, and, with the present wet weather, is regarded as quite sure. A larger acreage has been devoted to grain, corn and potatoes than last year. From the eastern portions of the State report show that an unusual amount of potatoes have been planted—largely in excess of the amount planted last year, the high price of the present season and fears of a decreased breadth devoted to the crop in other portions of New England on account of the fears of damage from the potato bug. During the past four or five years, there has been a gradual increase in the amount of land devoted to cultivated crops in Maine, so that with a favorable season an unusual harvest will be gathered the present season.

The State Land Agent, Hon. E. B. Burleigh, is in receipt of numerous letters of inquiry from persons, not only in this state, but in all parts of New England, who design emigrating to the rich lands in the Aroostook County, and carving out for themselves homes. The tone of the communications is far different from those usually received, the writers expressing their determination to go. Other twenty letters, per day are received. The Land Agent replies by circular letter, giving information in full. Mr. Kling, the Aroostook member of the Executive Council, reports that the people are fast pouring into the county. Several farms have recently been taken up in Perham plantation.—Kennebec Journal.

The last target firing with the celebrated 81-ton gun at Shoeburyness, England, was a very expensive affair. The load consisted of 250 pounds of powder—the heaviest charge ever fired from rifled ordnance—and a 1700-pound shot, and the target against which the ball was fired cost 830,000 and consisted of 24 inches of iron and 36 inches of teak, backed by a heavy structure of piles. The shot penetrated almost entirely through the whole structure, and as the target can only be used four times in all, each discharge of the gun, without counting the cost of the powder and shot, represents $7500.

The Constitutional Democrats observed the anniversary of the Twitchell tragedy. The local paper gleefully records: "A mechanic, evidently a skillful one, built a pair of wooden goggles and a gun and suspended the two on a pole on the river front of Lincolnville Wednesday morning, the first anniversary of the shooting of Marshall H. Twitchell and the killing of George King. The people rejoiced over the murder of one man and the mangling of another. And these fellows are in favor of conciliation!"

DOMESTIC NEWS.

SOUTH CAROLINA

Alleged Frauds.

NEW YORK, May 26 It is stated that evidence has been unearthed in Columbia S C showing that a fraudulent printing bill of $225,000 was paid by a vote of the Legislature for work which is being done for a year for $10,000 A bribery fund was paid to ex Gov Moses, ex State Treasurer Cardozo, State Senators Nash and Whittemore, ex State Senator, Y J P Owens, Timothy Hurley, one of the Electors at that time L W Mackey, speaker of the Mackey House also recently Liberal portions They will be vigorously prosecuted

The Charleston Delegation's Claim Denied

COLUMBIA, May 27 The Assembly Committee on Privileges and Elections on Saturday reported adversely on the claim of the entire Charleston delegation of 17 members, including Speaker Mackey, to seats on the ground that there was so much fraud and intimidation in the county as to vitiate the election Evidence upon this point was almost wholly derived from the report of the Congressional sub-committee which visited Charleston last fall

CONDENSED DESPATCHES.

A Springfield, O., despatch says Farlow, a Boston capitalist, has been indicted for embezzlement in connection with the litigatory movement, to gain possession of the Cincinnati & Sandusky Railroad.

A Washington despatch says Mr. Blaine's friends deny that he knew, or has had, or will have anything to do with the new party movement

Both the Union and Confederate dead graves were decorated at Norfolk, Va., Friday.

Five thousand people witnessed the hanging of Jack Wilson at Dover, Tenn., Friday.

Judge Orin C. Pratt of the U. S. District Court, at San Francisco, played Banco with some gamblers in New York, lost $100, had them arrested that night and Saturday appeared against them in the police court

It is announced that the great 12 inch rifled guns, the first made for the Government of the United States will be cast at the South Boston foundry next Wednesday. Nearly all the workmen in the National armories and workshops will be discharged July 1st

The New York Herald's Washington correspondent has a report that General Butler intends emigrating to Colorado turn sheep farmer and come to Congress as Senator of the Centennial State The General said he purchased 75,000 acres of land of Colonel Craig to whom the Supreme Court recently awarded the title of an extensive tract long in dispute

Mayor Butler of Portland has issued a call to citizens to contribute to the sufferers by the St Stephens fire

FOREIGN NEWS.

RUSSIA vs. TURKEY.

THE SULTAN BETWEEN TWO FIRES

The Weakness of the Army in Asia.

A CHANGE OF THE MINISTRY.

The Russian Advance

ASSISTANCE FROM SERVIA.

A Dangerous State of Affairs

LONDON May 26 A Vienna dispatch says the proclamation of a holy war looks like yellow fire to popular demand which has been growing loud for days that the Sultan pin the cross The proposal that the Sultan put Constantinople into a state of siege is the question whether it is safe to leave half a Parliament which is becoming more and more difficult to manage and which moreover has the whole population of Constantinople with it

The Russian Armies in Asia

LONDON May 26 Sir Arnold Kimball British Military Attache gives a diploma of account of the Turkish armies in Asia which lack everything except courage and patience As things were and still are the Russian armies do not find very serious military resistance in Asia and the only difficulties they will have to encounter are those of country and climate

Bars

PARIS May 26 The Russian bombardment of Kars has slackened They continue their advance on Erzerum and a battle is expected shortly A detachment of Russians yesterday attacked the Abschilan village Ysaba and Ibaka near Batoum The Abschilan chiefs assemble daily their available forces and repulsed the Russians who lost 100 killed and many wounded A Major and four Captains were found among the slain The Turkish loss was seven killed and eleven wounded

A Change of Ministry

NEW YORK May 27 (Herald's special) A change in the Turkish Ministry is regarded as inevitable in consequence of the old manifestation of Soffas It is likely to embrace the Grand Vizier Minister of Foreign Affairs and Minister of War

A French Loan

The French consortium headed by M Erlemil has offered the Porte a loan of 60 000 000 francs in consideration of the right to issue and circulate small coin from the produce of Turkish mines. It has also offered a new loan of 22 000 000 sterling which shall serve as a foundation for the new intended issue of 5 million consolidates

The Tartar Insurrection

The rights of the Tartar insurrection in Crimea have turned out entirely without foundation Cantacuzene has arrived at Sebastopol to take command of the forces The Czar has ordered further extensive mobilization for the purpose of concentrating a strong reserve

Russia's Pledge and Intentions

A prominent Russian diplomatist says [illegible] intends to redeem her pledge as far as the grand element of the territory were British or Italian provinces in Asia Minor Herzegovina Roumania Servia and Bosnia and guarantees these provinces their independence no matter what power in Europe may oppose the action of Russia The terms of peace with the Russians gaining decisive victories would perhaps include the surrender on the part of Turkey of a portion of her fleet and the consumer of a treaty placing the city of Constantinople under the joint control of all foreign powers They will probably be garrisoned by troops of a central power While Turkish virtual government will be invested in a legislative and executive body of men composed of the different nationalities and perhaps a tax or tribute will be paid to the Ottoman Empire Russia has no intention of annexation into Asia Her ambition is to become master and possessor of part of the Celestial Empire Toward this end all her roads into Asia are directed

The Caucasus Revolt

LONDON May 27 A revolt in Caucasus can be productive only of petty annoyance in view of the precautions adopted for the advance of the Russian army which is closely followed by another army of civil functionaries, so that by the time the Russian commander gets to Erzerum, all that lies this side of the river Choruk will be a Russian province The Districts of Sturnel, Bayazid and Dardik are already under Russian administration

Erzerum

[illegible] will be permanently occupied is the conviction open by expressed in other native circles in India

The Servian Element

On the Danube a new element must be taken in account in defining the present situation or discussing the probable of the future, namely, the Servians who, it is confidently asserted, have occupied the chief point of [illegible] and near the Timok with 20,000 men and 84 guns under Gen Horvatovich Their headquarters and 10,000 are said to be at Negotin, 6 000 men at Sortschat 3 000 at Kladova 2 000 at Rajova and Bikovanoutz and a second corps of 8 000 to 10 000 strong is said to be concentrating at Beuil under Olimpich

A Chain of Sentinels

From Grujo on the Roumanian bank of the Danube and Radujevatz on the Servian is a chain of sentinels to Turnezverin and Khadova within call of each other to watch and give notice of the movements of the Turks Russian or Roumanian detachments also occupy Kerbeo and Ostrov Islands of the Danube, opposite Turnezverin and Cigunshi,

The system of the Russian advance seems to be that the points first occupied by one corps are ceded to another as it marches up, when the first continues its march to its real destination Thus the men are relieved of a continuous march, whilst the line remains unbroken The Danube is still too swollen and rapid to attempt the construction of a bridge

FRANCE

A Plot Against MacMahon

PARIS, May 26 A plot to overthrow MacMahon has been discovered in Paris and he will make the discovery a pretext for harsh measures. All Republican telegrams are now stopped.

MacMahon Says So

President MacMahon, speaking at Compiegne, to-day, said the change in the Cabinet only assures the stability and peace of France He will not mix with outside politics

DEATH OF WILLIAM J LAWRENCE Early last Friday morning William J Lawrence died at his residence on Centre street in his 71 years He was a painter by trade and has been engaged in the business in this city for more than forty years He was affable and sympathetic in his social relations, dignified, quiet and gentlemanly in his personal appearance, respected and beloved by all who enjoyed his acquaintance He was an earnest and exemplary Christian and a member of the First Baptist church. His funeral takes place at his late residence on Centre street at 4 o'clock this afternoon

A MAD DOG. Yesterday afternoon a dog owned by Mr. A W. Benson, came into Hon H M Plaisted's house on Broad way and caused the inmates great fright as he exhibited all the symptoms of rabies Getting up this to do anything with the animal, the doors of the room he was in were closed and he ran about jumping at times almost to the ceiling in his paroxysms the froth at his mouth flying against the walls and furniture After a time the dog got under a flight of steps, from which place he could not be dislodged and Officer Weymouth who had been sent for was obliged to shoot him there The dog was a well trained and gentle bird dog, highly esteemed by his owner. He had been sick for a few days, but nothing serious was thought of it

REFORMERS' MEETING The audience at City Hall, yesterday, was quite large and the exercises were of more than average interest. President McIntyre of the Club, presided. The meeting opened by singing "Near the Cross," followed by reading the scriptures and prayer Short speeches were made by the following advocates of reform: Messrs McIntyre McFarland, Walker, Wheeler and Montgomery of the Club; Mrs Hunt, Mrs Crocksman, Mrs. Soule and Mrs George Palmer of the Crusade, and by James H. Burgess Esq., Clerk of Courts, and N. L. Parkins, Esq., Recorder in our Police Court. The remarks of each speaker were well received, especially those of the last two named gentlemen, who, for the first time, added largely in making the occasion one of profit to the cause and cheer to the Club. Miss Hattie Briggs, the infant songstress, rendered quite prettily the solo in "Pull for the shore," and was heartily applauded for her marvelous effort. Several signatures to the pledge were obtained.

EXAMINATION OF THE FISHWAY. C. G. Atkins of Bucksport, Superintendent of the U. S. Salmon Breeding Works at that place, and the designer of the fishway at the dam at Veazie Falls, E. M. Stillwell State Commissioner of Fisheries, with I H Foton, the Constructing Engineer of the Works, visited the fishway again Saturday evening, the tide being at its lowest stage, in order that Mr Atkins might go through and examine the entire work, in order to do which the water had to be shut out. When this was done two salmon of large size were found evidently surprised at not finding the gates open A gentleman living near the Works jumped into the fishway and lifted one of the salmon out weighing some 28 or 30 pounds, but it was thought best to restore him to his native element, that he might pursue his way to the head water Mr Atkins and Mr Stillwell expressed themselves satisfied with the efficacious ness of the structure, having had with others ocular demonstration that fish passed through and the efforts of Bangor and those interested in maintaining the supply of fish in our river may feel assured that the bar to this interest created by building the dam at Veazie Falls, has been well overcome by the admirable designs of Mr Atkins The fishway is the largest and most thoroughly constructed of any in the New England States, and taken altogether is superior to any in the United States It will probably be the type of the most important fishways hereafter to be constructed in the country

MEMORIAL SERVICES

Eloquent Sermon by Rev E T Hazlewood

The First Baptist church was crowded to its utmost capacity last evening with those desirous of hearing Rev E T Hazlewood Memorial sermon before the members of the Grand Army

The church was elegantly decorated with flowers and large cross in front of the altar hung particularly beautiful

The services were opened with an organ voluntary by Miss Kate Stewart, after which the pastor read a portion of scripture followed by a selection by the choir from the 103d Psalm Mrs Hazlewood then rendered another beautiful solo Rev. Mr Hazlewood then proceeded to deliver his discourse from the following

TEXT—Heb 11 7—Why should it be thought a thing incredible with you that God should raise the dead?

The following is an abstract of the sermon

There are many reasons why we should particularly sympathize with the spirit of the observance of the Soldiers Memorial Day For we cannot afford to forget what great sacrifice of life and treasure attest the integrity of our nationality and what has been preserved But even the high world do not recommend this to keep fresh in mind the virtues of the dead and the nobility of the dying the service would still be hallowed by patriotism it begets and nurtures But this is not my purpose to dwell upon the reasons why a service like so beautiful and so instructive should commend our respect and attention

Spain says an old Dutch proverb is silver but silence is golden—a suggestion peculiarly appropriate to this occasion For the world is sometimes in a mood which cannot endure sound doctrine or appreciate the truth Yet in such a mood it appears to be to day, hence it has often of late occurred to me that it would be for the better with simple prayer and sweet strains of music for the survivors of the soldiers to go to the graves of their former companions in arms and in silence scatter thereon the fragrant flowers, than to attempt with words to improve the age with the nobility of their sacrifices or the honor I am in fear of this lest some well meant reverence let me compare the memorial services of the dead during a time of partisan strife with the manna of old that the Lord bade the Israelites gather that the children of Israel might know that it was the bread the Lord had given them to eat

So also in these days of social earthquake politics when loyalty to the Union or to a principle is counted a weakness and the selling of a Judas or of a Jesuit is forever a savior for thirty pieces of silver is worshipped as success this sacred service of memorial in which you are to engage will speak more eloquently than human lips of the nobility of the dying who died in defence of liberty

I know not how you feel comrades but for myself turning aside like from the mercenary spirit that would sell the sacred memories of the dead for a mess of pottage and the policy of hate that would perpetuate discord and strife it were the upper and nether millstone between which the hallowed name and fame of the Pilgrim Fathers and the noble sentiments and tender feelings of the soldiers living are to-day crushed and bruised and wasted to nothingness and much prefer to go to the graves of our comrades and scatter upon them the sweet flowers emblems of life all to soon coil down to perish than to reason with that which is unreasonable—for I can not to argue either on the one hand with the spirit of revenge or on the other hand with the spirit of ingratitude

But some thought may not be inappropriate this Sabbath evening preceding the observance of your beautiful memorial custom Hence I will call your attention to some things which belonging to the past were once a source of irritation and trouble to us but which now lie dead and buried beyond the possibility or hope of resurrection in the graves opened for them by those who consecrated their lives to their country and then to certain living questions which demand our attention

Notice, then, comrades that human slavery, so far as this nation is concerned lies dead and buried in the grave opened for it by those who died in defence of liberty for, in the providence of God, for this purpose the soldier girded himself and went forth to the battle and laid down his life in the heat of the contest. I know that this was not the purpose for which President Lincoln called for his 75,000 men in the breaking out of the rebellion, I know that this was not the purpose for which the war in the beginning was prosecuted by the Government; for all the resources of the nation were pledged simply to the putting down of the rebellion. Mr Lincoln himself, in his famous letter to Horace Greeley, admitted that the question of slavery was wholly secondary, that he should save the Union with slavery if possible, though he should at any sacrifice save it if he could.

At that time if a vote had been taken in the army, it would have been found almost impossible to obtain the attention of the arming of the slaves and the turning of their guns against their former masters. Even at so late a day as when the army was at Yorktown under command of Gen McClellan, it was found necessary to circulate tracts among the soldiers to educate them to the conviction that it would be right to arm the negroes and that it would be no disgrace for white regiments to march shoulder to shoulder with black regiments to battle and mingle their blood in one offering upon the altar of freedom. It is true that there were here and there men who were wise enough and bold enough to declare which the first gun was fired on the reading of the General Order supply ship that happened to the relief of Major Anderson, that that was the end of slavery within the jurisdiction of the United States But it was not until after many months of most disastrous conflict, when our honored Chief Magistrate took the slave and before God on bended knee vowed that he should be free, that the people came clearly to see that this war though begun and prosecuted in the purpose of man for the suppression of rebellion, in the providence of God should not end until human slavery ceased to be an American institution Before the people were committed to this it made no difference how great our armies, how perfect their discipline by what Generals inspired and led, how unbounded the resources of the nation, or how unlimited the patriotism and sacrifices of the people General after General of ability and loyalty came to the command of the army only to find some impossible obstacle to success But when the glad tidings of liberty were published at the Capital, and shouted upon the streets of every northern city by the newsboys and read in the humble cabin of the slave by the light of the burning pine knot fresh hope and courage were given to our armies in a new front to their foe This fighting our armies were successful and led not than the passage of the thirteenth amendment to amplish this result It was the work of which made it a fact accomplished

But again partial manhood suffrage and its sequent disfranchisement lead and buried the grave opened by our patriot fathers If the emancipation of the slave was one of the greatest moral victories of the age, no less so was the incorporation into the fundamental law of the land of the principle of equality without distinctions of color For one of the results of the war has been the purging of the political atmosphere of the Nation, embodying a principle which should secure for the black man the same privileges possessed by the white man—even those privileges which may be subject of special legislation or the result of public opinion For many of us have lived to see the black man not only to read and write for himself and to testify to others, without arbitrary and impertinent interference of law but also to enter almost every path of political advancement But yet again, comrades in the graves opened for them by those who died that their lives to their country might be dedicated and buried the former causes of disputes and alienations and strife Human Slavery, disfranchisement of race and color were the two which brought the North from the South they were the foundation upon which the Confederacy was to be built

But the war has obliterated these lines and sweetened this foundation away So no sour bitterness to a certain extent remains in some sections is even more than these words for Not that I have a right to criticise, but I do not and no other I am

The causes of alienation and strife removed we ought to observe our Memorial with the large cheer for the quieted consciences and with public safety for the questions which now confront us are not questions of the past but of the present not of a divided country but of a whole country The brave men who died for liberty did not die in vain

They never fell who died
In the cause of truth and liberty
They are with God and all good angels
They are in his kingdom
They are not lost but gone before
They are not dead but sleeping
They are in God's care
They are at rest
They are at home
They are happy
They are with us
They are in our hearts
They are in our memories
They are in our prayers
They are in our thoughts
They are in our souls
They are in our lives
They are in our deaths
They are in our graves
They are in heaven
They are in God
They are in us
They are in us all

The preacher then poke of certain illegitimate conclusions remarking that following the inflated condition of the currency and the impetus given to almost every industrial pursuit by reason of the demand of the war there were developed an almost frantic desire and effort to see who would make money the fastest irrespective of the morality of the means Hence though the war was for a great principle, though it was pervaded with a great moral purpose it yet gave birth to a second long of things which made strong for treasonable purposes and perpetuated the worst of business which is well illustrated in the country to the By have come the young men stronger in nerve and honest high by the telling of the soldiers forefathers of the immortal fathers of the That the strife has brought to the surface from the fire that purifies the fairest portion of our land the society of which we can depend to preach a rebuke to attention to the loss of trade loss of life at sea and by land by unscrupulous dealers fraudulent sales embezzlements breaches of trust swindling operations in stock companies and the thousand and one ways by which men have sought to make money without an adequate return and I quote in part from Mr Lincoln's address

The preacher showed how the land resulted in the upbuilding of large and rich monopolies in making the richer and the poor poorer in contests of labor and capital, in the undermining of friendship between employer and employes and in the spread of that caste which is an enemy of all republican institutions

But if the age has been characterized by this mania for wealth without regard to the means of its acquisition, it has also been characterized by a disposition to spend it more prodigally and selfishly without regard to the good of others—an act in violence to all the great principle of Christianity which teaches us that man should not live for himself alone but for others

The two great questions then of the day are how to of dealing man with man, and a sound liberal expenditure of the fruits of honest industry, not only in self-culture, but also in lifting humanity up to a larger liberty and a greater happiness

But finally comrades the moments come and go, time flies space, and the hour of our departure is at hand Hence it is fitting that we should not forget that the question of all questions the most vital for us is how shall I improve the larger opportunity and the greater civilization in which I have come that I may attain to the great end of human governments and social existence

The preacher here quoted a passage from an eminent French philosopher on the superiority of man to human governments, and closed as follows Let us then, comrades, in the greater privilege and larger freedom secured for us by the heroic sufferings and death of those who fought and died for their country, see to it that we do not fail, each for himself by believing on the Lord Jesus Christ, to gain the good fight of faith and lay hold on eternal life.

Memorial Day in Kendiskeag

The Memorial Day services at Kendiskeag yesterday, under the auspices of Daniel White Post, No 10, were of a very interesting character. About 40 members from H. H. Beale Post of this city were present under command of Hon. A. C. Hamlin, Post Commander

The procession was formed near the Town Hall and marched directly to the cemetery, where the graves of the honored dead were strewed by a number of beautiful young ladies dressed in white, while the Comrades stood [illegible] which followed the reading of the General Orders prayer by Rev Mr Blacker, singing by a select choir, led by Mr Barrows reading of the roll of honor and a beautiful poem written by Mrs Nash, one of the members of the Daniel White Post

The address by Hon. E B Neally of this city was one of marked excellence and held the close attention of his hearers until the last word was pronounced He alluded to the rejoicing of the country over the Centennial year, and the principles of government which had triumphed in our growth as a nation, and then claimed that with such a curse as slavery existing, it was impossible, as Abraham Lincoln had foretold for the Republican system to flourish Hence our civil war was unavoidable He then drew a picture of the losses and also the triumphs of our war and of the great debt we are under to those who fell in the service of their country From this he closed with an exhortation to the duties of citizenship which the day teaches and the perils which free government encounters in times of peace and the need of constant watchfulness on the part of its friends

The weather was of the best and the exercises all passed off to the satisfaction of all concerned
